Not illustrated. 1902 Excerpt: .These suggestions are not adapted to all kinds of institutions, but will give the general line of inquiry for most. Literary merit is not essential, but not forbidden. Two visits are advantageous if not too difficult--one arranged, and the second casual and unannounced. BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS. General plan.--The buildings are arranged with studied carelessness, giving a very pleasing and home-like look. Adaptability to work.--This has been clearly demonstrated, especially in the case of Rockefeller Hall, a building the exterior of which bears a resemblance to cold, rare roast beef. Interior decoration.--This varies, and many artistic effects are produced. The climax has been reached in the case of the parlor of Davison House, where a unique mingling of magenta and purple bids the rash gazer wipe her eye. Heating.--The buildings are heated by steam-pipes which rouse the inmates at six A. M. sharp, thus giving them time to decide that it will be necessary to rise at seven A. M. Furniture.--This is not over-decorated nor heavily carved, and consists usually of perfectly good tables and chairs, some of which enterprising inmates have painted black. This, of course, gives the effect of ebony. Laundry, steam or hand.--Steam, hand and sometimes fire and water. The latter method is more destructive. The laundry-work is occasionally done in Troy. This method, however, has been found distressing, being in many cases responsible for the blues. INMATES. Class for whom intended.--The institution was originally intended for young women interested in the pursuit of...
